

On your essay "Oh How We Need Thee"

By Maurice Nichols, CEO, Bank of Africa Project (092124)

I'm with you completely on the need, the urgency, and the necessity to transition from talk to action. Indeed, "it'll most certainly take money to buy the land," and since we know that "money talks" it occurred to me that any Black council trying to attract large numbers of our people and get them involved with their time and their own money will more than likely have to come up with some pretty substantial capital of our own. So what I'll be doing is constantly telling any Black person who'll listen that there's $2 TRILLION of our money enriching and empowering other people 24/7 365 days a year and if we all match each other's weekly dollar, honestly, faithfully, and righteously, the numbers say that significant revenue will be generated, and like a virtual "money magnet" our people will be drawn together in a national movement with global implications. Thanks for your continued efforts and labor on behalf of God's people.
